Jennie Webb is an independent Los Angeles playwright whose plays have been presented on stages throughout the U.S. and internationally at the Edinburgh Fringe Festival. Her works have been published by Heinemann Press, IWCP, Indie Theater Now and supported by The Playwrights Center's PlayLabs, Great Plains Theatre Conference, Road Theatre Summer Playwrights Festival, Virginia Avenue Project, Little Black Dress INK and Will Geer's Theatricum Botanicum, where she teaches workshops and runs the theatre's new play development program, Botanicum Seedlings. She is currently a resident playwright at LA's Rogue Machine Theatre; member of the Playwrights Union, EST/LA's Playwrights Unit and PlayGround-LA Writers Pool; part of Moving Arts' MADlab; on the Blank Theatre's Living Room Series Artistic Committee; and co-founder of the LA Female Playwrights Initiative (LA FPI).

Critics have called her writing "somewhere between 'The Simpsons' and John Guare" & "riddled with wicked wit" (Los Angeles Times); Edinburgh Evening News said she "pulls no punches"; ArtsBeatLA praised her "dependable authorial voice" and from The Scotsman: "Showing comic flair and sophistication, Webb charts well how American women feel, and how U.S. society makes them feel." She describes her own playwriting style as "domestic absurdism."

A graduate of USC's School of Drama, she started her career as a stand-up comedienne, and went on to produce a number of world premieres with her own company, The Rough Theater; from 1996-1997 she worked with a group of women writer/performers to develop original material as part of a development deal with Paramount Studios. As a freelance writer, she was a theater critic for Backstage and on-air for KCRW-FM and other outlets; she is the author of numerous articles, columns, essays and criticism in publications such as the Los Angeles Times and Entertainment Today, and websites including TheaterMania.com.
